

Michael E. Summers

Michael E. Summers is Professor of Planetary Sciences and Astronomy at George Mason University. He does research on the composition and structure of planetary atmospheres with the goal of understanding their origin and evolution. He has worked with over a dozen NASA space missions and is currently a Science Team member on the NASA/New Horizons mission that explored Pluto and the distant regions of our solar system.